4 Introduction

Personality is defined as a clear mix of a person's thoughts, feelings, and actions. Personality can generally be thought of as being very consistent throughout an individual's emergence from the inside out. Personality clarification can cover a variety of topics, from hereditary personality traits to the role of the environment and involvement in the development of a person's personality. (Alan E, 2000)

4.1 Etymology

The term "person" comes from the Latin word "persona", which literally means "mask". Consequently, we can also define personality as the way we introduce ourselves to others. Personality is a term that describes how we think, feel, act and communicate. Many authors express their opinions on the theme of individuality. Fred Ratan's Gordon Allport B.F. Skinner is in it. (Kendra c., 2020)

4.2 Definition

According to Ferd Luthans, personality shows the interaction of personality with patterns of internal and external quantifiable traits, how individuals see and interpret how they influence others.

According to Gordon Allport, personality is the dynamic structure of a person's psychophysical processes that determine unique adaptations (traits, behaviors, thoughts) to the environment.

Personality, according to B. F. Skinner, is the word for a person's reaction to external stimuli. Processes like operant conditioning shape people's behavior.

"Personality refers to the more or less structured collection of ideas, attitudes, characteristics, beliefs, and habits that an individual has formed into roles and status for dealing with others and with himself," according to Kimble Young.
